

SHEEP & GOATS

Meat from goats is called chevon.

Meat from sheep is called lamb or mutton.

Goat meat is included in many ethnic dishes around the world.

Some goats provide mohair, other goats provide milk.

Sheep and goats provide both food and fiber for people.

One sheep will produce eight pounds of wool each year. That's enough to make a three-piece suit!

SUGAR BEETS

Sugar beets have been grown in Nebraska for over 100 years.

By-products from sugar beets are molasses and beet pulp, both of which are used in livestock feed.

Fifty-five percent of the world's sugar production comes from sugar beets, and 45 percent comes from sugar cane.

A grain of sugar under a microscope looks just like a jewel, and it reflects light from 14 facets.
